

Your groups will be divided (or choose one if you are doing this as homework) into either General Washington and his aides, or members of the Continental Congress, and you will compose a short letter that you will present from their perspective:

Washington — write a letter describing the state of your army and what you need in order to defeat the British in Battle, and describe the importance of their willingness to help the army.

Congress — Write a letter to Washington describing your expectations of him and the Continental Army, and describe what (if anything) you are capable of providing the army at this time. Keep in mind that individual colonies have refused to offer support or supplies since they have opted to stockpile those supplies for their own defense.
